

Frank Cobelens is professor of Global Health at the University of Amsterdam, The Netherlands, and leads the Amsterdam Institute for Global Health and Development. Trained as a physician and epidemiologist he has been involved in tuberculosis research for over 20 years. His work focuses on multidisciplinary approaches to problems on the interface of biomedical aspects of tuberculosis and its socioeconomic and public health context, as well as on evaluation of control interventions.